Folks:

From our beach you can look north, right across the western tip of Cranberry Lake at a bulkhead of firs and hemlock trees. Winds from the Northern points hit these tree covered hills, sweep over them and roll down onto our race course, sometimes from the left, more often from the right. Like a trip hammer a very small change in the direction of the wind supply results in an almost instantaneous and radical change on our course.

This makes for some really interesting sailing that sometimes seems to come down to luck to be in the right place at the right time. But a quick look at the results of today's racing will show you that some folks have it figured out a lot more than others.

If you want some tips on this black art, watch Joe, but look hard. He's quick.

Enjoy.

Larry Stiles
