Folks:

The sun was bright, the sky was clear and the breeze was light but steady out of the west at two and a half MPH. The tide was so far out that the surveyors were there using instruments to try and find the water.

The low tide served to put the skippers that much higher above their boats. It was like Google Earth, model yacht racing viewed from space.

Wednesday sailing is usually given over to a lighter tempo of competition with the emphasis on experimentation and education. NOT!!

Way too many positive aspects. We could not get the next race started soon enough. You had to force yourself to stop and tune your boat. What a groove.

Enjoy.
